Critics are sounding the alarm, arguing that powerful elites, including Bill Gates–backed initiatives, are pushing mRNA technology far beyond vaccines and into the food system itself.

From produce to dairy to meat, opponents fear a future where consumers have no say in whether experimental biotech is used in what they eat.

Whether framed as “innovation” or “public health,” the core issue is consent, transparency, and choice.

People didn’t sign up to be test subjects, especially not at the dinner table.

The question now is simple: who decides what goes into your body, you, or them?
